Not illustrated. 1915 Excerpt: .the battle, by demanding impudent an apology from Washington for his words on the battlefield. Washington replied with a scathing letter, telling him he should have an opportunity as soon as feasible of proving to the world that he was not guilty of a breach of orders and of misbehavior before the enemy. in not attacking them, and of making an unnecessary, disorderly, and shameful retreat. Lee wrote a grossly insolent reply to this, welcoming the opportunity of showing to America the sufficiency of her respective servants, and sneering at the temporary power of office and the tinsel dignity attending it. He was at once put under arrest, and a courtmartial convened July 4, with Stirling as president, to try Lee on the two charges stated by commander-in-chief or betrayal of her to the latter--or both. Even to gain a chance for the one, by displacing Washington, involved the other as a preliminary. At the same time he would not have called it betrayal, --merely compulsion to the Americans own ultimate good, as Arnold thought later. But that he is not entitled to the favorable view we take of Arnold s purposes, his whole history is witness. Q--What left after the concessions?----They would still acknowledge the same King --They would not be enabled to make any alliances or treaties hostile to G Britain--The appointment of the Gov would still be with us--The appointment of their officers still with us--The interests of the two nations would still...
