The sculptor was Mr. Cibber s father. Betty Careless, which he has chalked upon a board, to be Craz d with care, and cross d by hopeless love. He is absorbed in thought, and his whole soul so engrossed by the charms of his Dulcinea, that neither the discordant sounds of the fiddler, whose trembling strings Grate harshly on the nerve auricular, nor the roar of the pope, who is furiously denouncing destruction on all heretics, nor the ear-piercing noise of a barking cur, can awake him from his reverie. A crazy tailor and a mimic monarch complete this congregation of calamity. Two women, impelled by a most unaccountable curiosity, are walking in the background. Devoid of that delicacy which gives beauty new attractions, they forget that an eagerness to witness woe which they cannot alleviate, gives strong indication of...
