Not illustrated. 1892 Excerpt: . . . stem in this climate as it is wont to do in its native heath. We realize that we are walking upon fighting ground when we attack the old favorite Concord grape. We will admit that there are some few Labrusca crosses that have shown up fairly well, and while that is true, there are superior fruiterers grown on the Lincecumii (the post oak) indigenous to this climate. This is one of the deep rooting varieties, that can be said to be great drouth resisters, smaller leaves that exhale less moisture, consequently this quality should recotnmend them if for no other. It has been claimed by some that the hardiness of the Concord was its redeeming quality. This question will hardly enter into grape culture in central and southern Oklahoma, as the climatic influence obviates any danger of loss by freezing. The iEstivalis (the summer, and great wine producer of the south and west) has proven to be a stock producer; when crossed with hybrids of very many varieties is superior to the Labrusca stock. Our consideration of the grape will be confined to the varieties grown at the Station, some of which will be new to many of the readers of this Bulletin. Two hundred and seventyfive varieties were grown, including nearly all of the old varieties, and very many of new, showing no merit here. We assume that some place, and perhaps under more favorable conditions, the vines that we will here indicate as shy...
